

JOIN THE FIGHT TO BAN CAT DECLAWING IN NEW JERSEY

Senator Troy Singleton and Assemblymember Carol Murphy have introduced bills (A347/S1209) in the New Jersey Legislature to ban the practice of cat declawing.

GET THE FACTS

- Cat declawing, or onychectomy, is an unnecessary complicated surgical procedure that involves removing bone and cutting through nerves and ligaments to remove the last knuckle of each of a cat's digits. Declawing is not simply removing a cat's nails!
- Removing a cat's claws can result in chronic pain and other serious medical issues. When their claws are removed, cats are forced to alter their gait and how they distribute their weight, which can cause prolonged joint and back pain and early onset arthritis. Removal of the claws can also cause abscesses to develop in their paws, which can lead to additional pain and infection when claw regrowth occurs.
- Declawed cats are more likely to develop behavioral issues—such as becoming more likely to bite and less likely to use a litter box—which results in more cats given up to shelters. Los Angeles banned declawing in 2009, and in every year since then, L.A. shelters have taken in fewer cats than in years before the ban.

- The Paw Project, the Humane Society of the United States, the New York State Humane Association, the Humane Society Veterinary Medical Association, and many animal advocacy organizations and veterinarians in New Jersey all support a ban on cat declawing.
- Declawing is already banned or considered unethical by professional veterinary organizations in much of the rest of the world, including Australia, Austria, Brazil, Croatia, Germany, Ireland, New Zealand, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom.
